Invites you to further your simulation teaching expertise through:

The Teaching and Learning Certificate with a
Concentration in Health Care Simulation

Designed to deliver exceptional and state-of-the-art training for health care educators across specialties and disciplines, this exclusive interprofessional certificate program focuses on the use of simulation in health care education.

Collaboration... Capitalizing on collaborative faculty development opportunities that already exist in the Metro-Boston area, the simulation concentration is designed to streamline access to the MGH Institute certificate by offering credits by petition to graduates of the Harvard Macy Institute Program for Educators in Health Professions course and the Institute for Medical Simulation of the Center for Medical Simulation. All three Institutes cater to interprofessional health educators across the spectrum of disciplines.

Streamlined requirements... Participants who have completed the following course sequence will be eligible for an MGH Institute Teaching and Learning Certificate of Completion:

Certificate of Completion courses:

- HP 712: Foundations of Teaching and Learning Theories
  - Online
  - Harvard Macy Institute Educators in Health Professions Course alumni may petition for credit
- Institute for Medical Simulation Course is REQUIRED
  - The 5-day Comprehensive Instructor course is REQUIRED in lieu of HP 713: Course Design and Measurement of Learning Outcomes
- HP 714: Teaching Practicum
  - Mentorship by an education expert
  - Can be arranged in a location convenient to the participant’s place of work
  - Seminars with course faculty are available by web conferencing

The simulation concentration at the MGH Institute of Health Professions Teaching and Learning Certificate Program is designed to articulate seamlessly from the Certificate of Completion (9 credits), through the Certificate of Advanced Studies (15 credits), and beyond.
